The Anglo-Somali Society is a non-profit-making international friendship society whose objective is to foster friendship and understanding between Somalis and the English-speaking world, and to develop cultural and social relations between them.

The Society is non-political and does not identify with any particular group of Somalis. Individual members, however, are naturally interested in all aspects of, for example, politics, economic development, social and women's issues, education, history, anthropology, literature, and culture, in the Horn of Africa, as well as the current problems facing Somali refugees throughout the diaspora. Although the Society is not a pressure group its members wish for the peaceful coexistence of all Somalis and their English-speaking friends. As individuals, members may press for Somali interests wherever and whenever possible. The Society endeavours to establish and maintain links with Somali Community Associations. It is administered according to its Constitution by an elected Council.

Circumstances have changed radically over the last 40 years. The Society was founded in 1962 to promote good relations between the UK and the Somali Republic. It also served as a forum where those who worked in the former British Somaliland Protectorate and (ex-Italian) Somalia were able to remain in touch with each other and with their Somali friends. Valued colleagues of that older generation are still members. More recent members have an extremely varied range of interests in the Horn and the Somali diaspora. They live mainly throughout the UK, with a concentration in the South East. The largest group outside the UK are Americans. A few members live on mainland Europe as well as in eastern Africa and the Middle East. Some England-based NGOs, including aid agencies, are corporate members.
